Black Satin Favorite For Evening Wear

By GERTRUDE HERESFORD.

BLACK satin is in high favor for evening gowns, especially when combined with jet, rhinestone, silver or gold. A most effective bodice combines jet and rhinestone in solid embroidery laid over flesh-colored chiffon. A square of larger stones is set at the center front. From this ornament hang strands of jet beads. The skirt of black satin is draped in a spiral overskirt. Deep jet fringe hangs over the narrow black satin drape skirt. Although the Velasquez silhouette, demanding a full skirt and a tight, pointed bodice, is growing in popularity, many smart women cling to the narrower skirt that more closely follows the lines of the figure. The lead pencil silhouette is, however, passé. Skirts are decidedly wider than last year.

Law Shatters Happiness Of Young Couple

Honeymoon Interrupted in El Paso; Husband Is Held as Prisoner.

Sometimes the long arms of the law reach out and deal tragedy to some heart that has been filled with joy. Giving protection to the people of a nation it works by rule and oftentimes these rules strike hardest where there apparently is no wrong. There is such a tragedy in process in El Paso now. Four months ago Harry Sterne, of Bellingham, Wash., married a pretty young woman. The future was rosy. Life looked good and the young couple lived in living. Soon after his marriage Sterne and his bride purchased an automobile and prepared to come to El Paso. No secret was made of their departure. A substantial payment was made on the car and they started their honeymoon journey to the southern gateway to the United States. Arriving here they proceeded to divide their life between their love and the usual tourist activities. Then came the blow. A telegram was received by the police, signed by sheriff Will D. Wallace, of Bellingham, asking that the police arrest and detain Sterne. No explanation was given but the arrest was made. With his bride clinging frantically to his arm Sterne was taken to police headquarters. There he professed ignorance of any crime he might have committed. Mrs. Sterne went and declared that neither had done a wrong. Chief of police J. H. Montgomery decided to investigate and sent a telegram to the Washington officials demanding a copy of the warrant for Sterne's arrest. This warrant arrived, with the statement that an officer would arrive Wednesday to take Sterne into custody. The warrant charged grand larceny, based on a technical point which forbade Sterne's taking the automobile from the state without a full payment. The bride produced a cancelled check, proof of the good intentions of the couple. But it availed nothing against the rule of the law. And so Thursday a heartbroken bride and her husband will begin the long journey to the north, the husband a prisoner. But in his trouble Sterne had proof of the fidelity and absolute trust which his bride had given with her marriage vows. During his entire confinement, almost a week, she paid frequent visits to the city jail, where through the courtesy of the officers she is permitted to reside with her husband. She has provided her husband with comfort and not once has her faith faltered. Always she has hovered near that she might make the hard way easier. But the light may sift through the darkness. Officials here are of the opinion that the possession of the cancelled check will prove the magic key which will open Sterne's prison door. It is believed that the technicalities of the case will fade when confronted with evidence of the honesty of the man.

WALTER REESE'S CONDITION IS REPORTED TO BE WORSE

Attendants at Hotel Dine reported Tuesday afternoon the condition of Walter Reese, city detective captain, has taken a turn for the worse. After a short improvement physicians gave slight hope for his recovery and the setback occurring Monday night has reduced his chances for recovery to a minimum. Reese sustained a severely fractured skull at 5 o'clock last Friday morning when his car turned over on a curve at Val Verde. The payment had become sick from recent rains and Reese was unable to keep control of the car. William Kell, an oil salesman, was with him at the time of the accident but sustained only slight bruises. The injured man did not regain consciousness for more than 15 hours after the accident but recognized his wife on the morning of the fourth day.
